Stats show subway safety is slipping

Assaults on T increased over last year • Number of T cops to shrink • Despite uptick, riders feel safe

Transit police are working to quash an increase in assaults on the subway system, but that effort may be tougher in a few weeks.

On July 1, the number of Transit police officers is set to decrease by eight. Those positions will be reduced through attrition and they represent a small percent of the department's nearly 260 officers.

"As of right now it will have a minimal effect," said Transit Police Chief Paul MacMillan.

He said that the department will minimize the effect by using grant money to maintain high visibility patrols and by seeking more grants to eventually restore those positions.

The Metro reviewed crime statistics posted by the MBTA on the Transit Police website.

Those numbers showed that the assault and battery incidents on the main branch of the Green Line between Lechmere and Kenmore stations, as well as on the Red and Orange lines, are on pace to surpass last year's totals. Aggravated assaults on the main branch of the Green Line and on the Orange Line are also on a similar pace.

On the Orange Line, for example, there were 39 aggravated assaults and 163 assault and batteries during 2010. Through the first five months of this year there have been 31 aggravated assaults and 94 assault and batteries.

MacMillan said police have noticed the uptick and are working to keep the numbers as low as possible. Where multiple assaults occurred, officials make sure those stations are manned by officers to help reduce the trend, MacMillan said.

He also mentioned that while assaults have spiked, other crimes such as robberies are down or fairly stagnant.

"One incident or robbery is one too many," he said. "But when you put that in perspective of 1.3 million passengers a day, the system is relatively safe."

Have you seen these people?

Twenty-one faces top the MBTA Transit Police's wanted list, with crimes ranging from credit card fraud to taking photos up women's skirts.

Transit authorities continually ask for the public's help in identifying the suspects in an effort to clean up the crime that occurs on Boston's public transportation systems.

Photos captured using surveillance cameras move police one step closer to closing the case on numerous assault and battery incidents.

Some of the open cases date back to the summer of 2010. METRO

Passenger spits in driver's face

MBTA Transit police are asking for the public's help in identifying a woman who allegedly spit in a Dorchester bus driver's face because she said he stopped the vehicle too quickly.

The woman, who was with two kids, walked to the front of the Route 28 bus in Dorchester and allegedly spat in a driver's face and on his upper body before fleeing.

The suspect is described by transit authorities as a black female, between the ages of 30 and 40, wearing blue jean shorts, an orange and white outlined sleeveless shirt with black stripes and an orange halter strap.

According to reports, the woman was wearing orange high heels and carrying two small school bags with logos on them.

Empty commuter lot prices plunge

MBTA testing program where parking prices drop by a dollar or more Changes could become permanent

There are empty parking spots in commuter lots across Greater Boston, and the MBTA is lowering its parking rates to try to fill them.

MBTA General Manager Richard Davey announced the launch of a pilot program this weekend to increase the occupancy of lots in Mattapan, Milton, Hyde Park and some South Shore communities by dropping monthly and daily parking payments.

The initiative will take effect on July 1.

Daily parking rates in 10 lots across the state will be $3, while monthly rates for those lots will be $60.

Locations

MBTA
- Kingston
- Halifax
- Campello
- Fairmont
- Hyde Park
- Newburyport
- Lynn

Mattapan Trolley Line
- Butler
- Milton
- Mattapan

Currently, daily rates range from $4 to $4.50 while monthly rates are $70.

Davey said the MBTA will monitor the program over the next few months to decide if the changes will be permanent, based on its success.

Additionally, the MBTA is testing a "premium" parking program at the Braintree Station garage.

Guaranteed parking spaces at the area close to the station entrance can be reserved by customers for a monthly fee of $200.

The Dimock Center offers a range of services unlike anywhere else. We continue to develop new programs that change and grow with our community. Dimock is also the largest provider of substance abuse and mental health treatment, including developmental disabilities, in Boston's inner-city. With integrated care, Dimock is able to provide a holistic approach and offer a continuum of services specifically tailored to men in recovery. In addition to inpatient detox services and medical monitoring, we also provide outpatient addiction and recovery services and mental health services, including outpatient psychiatric assessments, medication management and individual and group therapy.

Our residential programs for men include: The John Flowers Recovery Home, providing substance abuse treatment and education for men 18 years and older, and Askia Academy at Dimock, a therapeutic community model that provides relapse prevention, confrontation management, peer evaluation, drug and alcohol education and individual counseling for men.

Gregg McAuliffe serves as Assistant Program Manager at Dimock's John Flowers Recovery Home and has been an employee for approximately seven years. He has personal ties to Dimock as his family members and friends have relied on Dimock's Behavioral Health programs to get well. Gregg gushes that he loves the work that he does and adds "I know when I'm working with these men, that I really am making a difference in their lives."

If you were to ask Gregg how many of the men that enter our programs have had thorough physical, dental or eye exams, he would tell you the number is quite small. For this reason, Dimock offers a selection of diverse programs to help our patients and clients get on the path of wellness.

Our Health Services provide excellence in service to our residents, patients and clients who come to our campus for all of their physical and behavioral health-related needs. Dimock's primary care providers focus on Men's health at every visit. In particular, screening for prostate cancer begins at age 40. Screenings can be done during the physical exam and by blood tests. We encourage our male patients to discuss their prostate health with their primary care physician. Together, patients and providers can determine the best way to screen for prostate cancer.

In addition to routine health care, Dimock also offers Community Care (HIV) Services. These services include free rapid HIV testing, counseling and peer support which all remain confidential.

The Dimock Head Start/Early Head Start and School Readiness programs are excited to announce that we will be partnering with a student from the Albert Schweitzer Fellowship to develop a program to increase male involvement in the lives of our children. We are now developing ideas for support groups that will take place from June of 2011 until May of 2012. These groups will help create an environment to guide men toward identifying their strengths, as well as deal with the obstacles they may encounter in their roles as positive male figures in the lives of our children. The program will also help raise the participants' self-confidence through workshops and social events.

The Dimock Center brings compassion and care to your neighborhood. We are committed to long term recovery and provide men with the support they need to live successful, independent lives. Our years of service have given us a unique understanding of the people we serve and we continue to provide integrated health and human services care to residents of Roxbury, Jamaica Plain, Dorchester and Mattapan.

◗ Congresswoman reunites with photographer friend for first photos after shooting ◗ 'It was very inspiring'

The first photos of Congresswoman Gabrielle Giffords since she was shot in January were released yesterday on her Facebook page.

The photos of the Arizona Democrat were taken by a professional photographer the day before her cranioplasty surgery in May.

"Any photographer in the country would have loved the opportunity to take these pictures and I was delighted to be asked," said photographer P.K. Weis of Southwestphotobank.com in a statement released with the photos.

In the photos, a smiling Giffords is seen with very short hair, wearing glasses and a burgundy shirt with a colorful collar.

The photos were taken May 17 at TIRR Memorial Hermann Hospital, the day after the launch of the Endeavour shuttle mission commanded by Giffords' husband Mark Kelly and the day before her surgery to replace a part of her skull.

Giffords has been recovering and undergoing therapy at the Houston hospital since she was shot on Jan. 8 at a political event in Tucson, Ariz. The 22-year-old suspected gunman now in custody, Jared Lee Loughner, allegedly fired into the crowd, wounding 13 people and killing six, including a federal judge, a child and one of Giffords' aides. REUTERS

'Inspiring'

Weis has known Giffords for more than a decade.

"It was very inspiring to see how much she had recovered in four and a half months. I was excited to see her and to see her smile. She was glad to see me, was in a good mood, smiling and laughing and seemed to enjoy the experience. I certainly did, too."

Batali, on Paltrow: 'She's hard as a rock'

Who could have a bigger appetite than Mario Batali? According to the legendary chef, it's none other than his good friend, Gwyneth Paltrow. We chatted with Batali at the unveiling of his new Web series for Bing, "Decisions with Mario Batali," which features short vignettes of Batali (directed by Fisher Stevens) offering his culinary words of wisdom, and asked the million-dollar question: Does Gwynnie really have as big of an appetite as she claims? "Bigger," he told us. "She can eat more than a truck driver. She can eat more than me. Keep in mind she exercises two-and-a-half to three hours a day, like a lady of means might be able to, and she can eat because of that. Have you ever touched her? She's hard as a rock. Like, every part of her." Seems even Batali himself has perfected one of the recipes in Gwyneth's new cookbook, "My Father's Daughter." "You know what I made that I'm really happy about? You take anchovies and put bread crumbs on them and bake them, with a little bit of squeezed tomato, and dry them, and then crumble them over pasta. It's a new part of my summer repertoire," he says.

Few big surprises at the Tony Awards

Known host and safe humor ease transition for Tonys ● Christianity and homosexuality running themes ● 'Book of Mormon' racks up awards

Last night, the 65th annual Tony Awards aired live on CBS. Despite concerns over a new venue, this year marked a successful transition from Radio City Music Hall, a 5,933-seater where the show's been since 1997, to Beacon Theatre, a former movie theater with half the house capacity. Neil Patrick Harris hosted for the second time — kicking off with a traditionally tongue-in-cheek number about how, with Mormons and nuns and businessmen and superheroes, "Broadway's not just for gays anymore."

Winners

- Best Performance by an Actor in a Featured Role in a Play: John Benjamin Hickey, "Normal Heart"
- Best Performance by an Actress in a Featured Role in a Musical: Nikki M. James, "Book of Mormon"
- Best Direction of a Play: Marianne Elliot and Tom Morris, "War Horse"

SEE ALL THE WINNERS: WWW.METRO.US

At press time, American Theatre Wing award recipients for featured roles in a play were Ellen Barkin (presented by Alec Baldwin) and John Benjamin Hickey (presented by Viola Davis), both starring in "The Normal Heart." Winning directors were Casey Nicholaw and Trey Parker for musical "The Book of Mormon" as well as Marianne Elliot and Tom Morris for the play "War Horse."

The first half of the program showcased musical numbers from "How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying," "Catch Me If You Can" and "Scottsboro Boys." Other sequences included comedy from John Leguizamo (currently starring in "Ghetto Klown") and six obligatory "Spider-Man" jokes in 30 seconds by Neil Patrick Harris.

A showdown between NPH and former host Hugh Jackman and performances from "Sister Act," "Anything Goes" and "The Book of Mormon," up for a 14 Tonys, rounded out the show.

The craftiest of job-seekers know how to flip small talk into a big opportunity.

You've heard of these types: They bump into an industry bigwig at a wedding or in an elevator and by the time cake is served or the doors open — ding — they've scheduled a job interview.

"It's a skill that can be learned," career coach Alex Freund says. "You have to develop something I call the 'likeability factor.' If you come off as flat, apathetic, depressed, who wants to talk to you?"

Play it cool, "Social Networking for Career Success" author Miriam Salpeter says. "You don't want to corner the person or make them feel like you're putting all your eggs in their basket," she says. "It's very stressful when someone feels like you're relying on them."

Use these strategies next time you find yourself seated next to the executive between you and your dream job:

Expert tips

Use your network

The person you're talking to almost certainly isn't hiring. But that person almost certainly knows somebody — who knows somebody — who is. "Say, 'I don't expect you to have an opening in this area, but perhaps you can share with me some thoughts about ways I can find out who's hiring.'"

Start with small talk

The right place to kick off some career-making chitchat is on common ground, Freund suggests.

"You need to establish a rapport," he says. "It can be talk about weather, human interests or commonalities like common friends. But soon after, get to the point."

Don't feel like you need to put on a one-man play explaining how you wound up jobless, either.

"Guilt pushes people in transition to talk about why they're not working," Freund says. "Just say 'I'm in transition.'"

Make it a conversation

If you're looking to hear a quick and easy "no," Salpeter warns, ask a stranger point-blank if he or she has a job. If you actually want a job, she adds, ask broad, generalized questions that flatter the person's expertise.

"You want to make it a conversation, a two-way street," she says. "You can provide information as well as ask for it."

The education of educators: When is the best time for teachers to earn master's degrees?

THINKSTOCK

▶ Depending on your career path, a master's degree could help you sooner rather than later.

According to the National Center for Education Statistics, 44 percent of veteran K-12 teachers had a master's degree as of 2008. Almost all of them earned the degree years after landing their first teaching job. But these days, 20 percent of first-time teachers have a master's degree before stepping foot in a classroom.

Increasingly, colleges are offering an accelerated, five-year bachelor's/master's degree program combo in order to adjust for this trend. Drexel University in Philadelphia is among the many schools experimenting with this hybrid degree.

Master's benefits

An undergrad/grad hybrid degree program allows students to obtain multiple certifications; this is useful when applying for jobs.

"[Students] can pursue a position in mathematics, but they might also have an endorsement in ESL. The more needs you can fill, the more desirable you are as a new hire," says Sarah P. Ulrich, the education program director at Drexel.

"Going straight through from bachelor's to master's has its advantages, and it's becoming more popular," says William Lynch, dean of the education school at Drexel. He estimates that about a third of his grad students came directly from undergrad. "It can definitely be a challenge once you're teaching to pursue a master's — splitting your focus on your job and education."

But a master's program forces students to choose an area of specialization. Should a teacher be a specialist before actually teaching a class?

"If you're already in a teacher-education program, my advice is to get your license to teach and to teach as soon as possible," says Jane Bailey, dean of the education school at Post University. "You're going to make a better decision about your specialty area after you've actually been in the job market."

To boost your career, volunteer

Whether you're looking for a new gig or a new industry, a little summer 'voluntourism' could help

Working for free might not sound like much of a vacation. But you'd be surprised what it could do for your résumé — which is why career experts suggest spending some time volunteering abroad this summer before you apply for a new gig.

A trip spent archiving artifacts or replanting rainforests can help both the unhappy and unemployed rediscover their calling, says sabbatical coach Clive Prout. "If you're unhappy with your current career, then use a sabbatical as a way to get out of it," he offers. "If you leave the country, you get a sense of the things we take for granted — particularly what we use as measures of success."

Doug Cutchins, author of "Volunteer Vacations," says "voluntourism" can also be a way to test-drive a new vocation, like eco-management or development economics. But it doesn't have to be just a break from your career, he adds — it can be a break for your career. "Volunteer vacations could be a short-term way to get some training, maybe learn another language and pick up skills. Really smart employers will not care so much whether you've been paid, just whether you've shown dedication, creativity and hard work."

CRUNTAS

▶ Volunteering can often cost you cash — which might be a problem if you're job-hunting. For less-expensive opportunities, stay close to home or choose a short international trip.

Add it to your CV

Time spent laboring in an exotic locale can make your résumé leap from the stack, Cutchins says.

The trick to leveraging a volunteer vacation into acceptable résumé material is to "just focus on the skills that you gained or honed," he says. Then, when it comes time for the interview, remember to "talk about how those particular experiences are relative to the job."

JUDY WEIGHTMAN

When students bring their laptops to class, are they using them to take notes and do research or to read Gawker and chat with their friends?

Just asking them doesn't necessarily lead to an accurate picture. When answering a questionnaire, a respondent may fudge the truth to look good — or may honestly not realize how much time he or she is wasting. To find out, some professors decided to spy on students and see what they were actually doing on their laptops during class.

Professor Jeff Sovern of St. John's University hired research assistants to sit in the back of his classroom. He told his law students that the RAs were there to observe, but didn't tell them what they were observing — which was what websites people visited.

Sovern found that only four percent of first-year students used their computers for non-class tasks, compared to more than 50 percent of second- and third-year students. He has therefore barred second- and third-year students from using laptops.

University of Vermont business professors James Kraushaar and David Novak took a more direct approach — they got 45 students to let them install spyware on their laptops. More than 50 other students declined.

PHOTODISC

▶ Would you let your professor — or boss — have access to your browsing history?

By the numbers

- The average University of Vermont student visited 65 new windows during a class, though one averaged 174 new windows.
- About two-thirds of all windows that the 45 students opened involved activities that had nothing to do with the class, including instant messaging and e-mail.

The Weiner inside us all

Anthony Weiner is simply the most recent in a long line of high-level people who have done what a very large amount of people do daily. Unfortunately, for him it will seriously hurt his private life and career. It may even become his primary legacy. One of the causes for this behavior is how we suppress natural sexual expression between people in our society. We deem it fully OK to show people killing each other on film and TV but do not allow showing an act of intimacy and love. We will continue to see many more examples of Weinergate until someone dares to address real problems. STAN JACOBSON, VIA E-MAIL

Oh, so now the people matter?

Some 56 percent of Weiner's constituents do not want him to resign, which means if people are paid off they will accept any behavior. Others are not clouded by extortion. He wanted to end the controversy in its midst by saying he needs to do the "work of the people." How come then he had so much time to Twitter? Did the work of the people not matter then? DAVID DIBELLO, VIA E-MAIL

Down with Chairman O

Chairman Obama has, in less than four years, mortally wounded this once-great nation. Presidential candidate Tim Pawlenty has a novel idea: Allow people to keep more of their money. The election comes down to this: Most of the 47 percent of the households that pay no federal income tax want the other 53 percent, who do, to pay more! JOSEPH DUPONT, VIA E-MAIL

What happened to basketball?

Can you imagine changing the rules of the game of soccer to allow the players to touch the soccer ball? Well, that's exactly what they've done to the NBA. They have allowed walking or traveling, taking two steps or more without dribbling, to cease to be a violation. The ability to take those steps turns an average player into a very good player. LARRY BLONG, VIA E-MAIL

Now that Obama's henchmen have succeeded in making Sarah Palin's e-mails public, we the citizens should demand that his pre-presidential e-mails be made public. I guarantee that his dirt is much more interesting. JOHN E. BEVAN, VIA E-MAIL

Horoscope

♊ Gemini May 21-June 20. Unless you manage your assignments strategically, your projects could begin to overlap and end up in one big jumbled mess. Don't try to do too many things at once.

♋ Cancer June 21-July 22. You don't like to be controlled, so understand that others don't like to be manipulated either. If you try to run them, you'll not only meet with resentment but anger as well.

♌ Leo July 23-Aug. 22. Fail to think for yourself and you invite others to make decisions for you. Unfortunately, the wrong people will usually use it to their advantage.

♍ Virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22. Be prepared to back up any claims you make, because there are always those who will challenge your statements, especially if what you say could affect them.

♐ Sagittarius Nov. 23-Dec. 21. Problems are likely to arise with persons who are either working for you or with you, if you don't deal with them very carefully and diplomatically. Be full of care and tact.

♑ Capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19. Unfortunately, it could be quite easy for you to take a flyer on a flimsy enterprise. Slow down your involvement in any investment proposal until you have time to investigate it thoroughly.

♉ Taurus April 20-May 20. It behooves you to keep a cool head if you find yourself having to contend with more work than you think is reasonable. BERNICE BEDE OSOL

▶ Patrice Bergeron and the Bruins will look to feed off the crowd tonight.

▶ B's won't have to look hard to find their sense of urgency tonight ▶ Garden crowd could key success

For whatever reason, the Bruins left their emotion and energy back at home Friday night, and it cost them dearly in Game 5 at Vancouver.

Tonight, the Bruins are back at the Garden for the final time this season, and there should be no shortage of urgency.

For the first time this postseason, the Bruins face elimination in a non-Game 7 setting, and the stakes couldn't be higher: They're looking to even the Stanley Cup finals at three games apiece and force an epic Game 7 on Wednesday night back in Vancouver.

"Our fans, they've been great all year and all playoffs, they've given us that extra jump and energy that we've needed," center Patrice Bergeron said. "It's up to us, and in front of our fans, to take all that energy and emotion that's going to be in the building and carry that out on the ice."

The Bruins are 0-2 in Game 6s so far this postseason, but both times the situations was reversed, with the Bruins on the road and leading Montreal and Tampa Bay 3-2.

This time, the Bruins will be at home, where they've won five straight and nine of their past 10 postseason games.

And they take the ice tonight as the desperate team. That served them well in overcoming previous series deficits, including losing the first two games of the finals before outscoring the Canucks 12-1 in two games at the Garden last week.

"I look at our resolve during the season and different times when we have had to come up large," Bruins coach Claude Julien said. "Our guys have always responded well, and I have a lot of confidence in our team. The reason we're here is because those guys have delivered, and I don't expect that to change."

Thomas' focus is on the ice

Tim Thomas didn't want to get into a war of words with Canucks goalie Roberto Luongo yesterday.

The Vancouver backstop had said Maxim Lapierre's eventual game-winner Friday would have been "an easy save" for him.

"I don't really want to go into that," Thomas said. "My focus is on what I can do to help my team win going into Game 6 here." METRO

2.07 Thomas has put up a 2.07 GAA in the playoffs. That's only a tiny bit higher than his regular-season 2.00.

Kesler good to go tonight

Ryan Kesler didn't skate in the Canucks' practice yesterday, but coach Alain Vigneault said he'll be on the ice tonight for Game 6 at the Garden.

"He's fine," Vigneault said. "Just gave him a day off. That's all."

Expect Vancouver to sport the same lineup it used in Friday's 1-0 victory in Game 5. METRO

2 The B's had previously stared down playoff ouster in Game 7 of their first-round series against the Canadiens. It took overtime, but Nathan Horton's OT goal gave Boston the 4-3 win. Unfortunately, Horton won't be around to play the hero tonight.

Red-hot Red Sox win again

Boston wins its ninth straight game ◗ No stopping the offense or pitching lately ◗ Tampa Bay is up

For about an hour yesterday, the Red Sox were tied for the best record in the big leagues.

They're not anymore — Philadelphia reclaimed the throne at 40-26 when it finished off a win over the Cubs. But there's little question Boston (39-26) is the most feared team in baseball right now.

The Sox crushed the Blue Jays 14-1 in a Sunday matinee, riding four home runs and a wonderful Jon Lester start to victory.

Boston's on a nine-game winning streak, but that barely scratches the surface of just how well they're playing these days.

The Sox have scored 30 runs in their last two games, and they've plated at least five in every contest since the streak started June 3 against Oakland.

No player typifies the streak better than David Ortiz, who homered yesterday. He's hit safely in 11 of his last 12 outings.

Meanwhile, on the mound, the Sox have given up four or fewer runs in four straight. METRO

US needs a win after rare defeat

Panama ended the U.S. national soccer team's 26-game unbeaten streak in Gold Cup group play with a 2-1 victory Saturday.

The triumph clinched a quarterfinal berth for the Panamanians, and put the Americans in a rare tenuous position at the CONCACAF tournament.

1 Three U.S. players are tied for the team lead in Gold Cup scoring, with one goal apiece.

The U.S. advances if it beats Guadeloupe in its Group C finale tomorrow. But if they lose, all bets are off. METRO

Florian earns shot at 145 belt

Massachusetts native Kenny Florian outclassed Diego Nunes in his featherweight debut Saturday night at UFC 131.

Next up: A likely showdown with 145-pound champion Jose Aldo.

"He deserves a shot at the title," UFC boss Dana White said of Florian after the unanimous decision victory in Vancouver. "No doubt about it." METRO

Belmont Stakes. Long shot

▶ Jose Valdivia Jr. rides Ruler On Ice to victory.

'Ruler' rules final leg

Long shot Ruler On Ice overtook Shackleford in the final straight Saturday to win the Belmont Stakes in New York. Ruler, a 24-1 long shot, finished 3/4 of a length ahead of Stay Thirsty. The Kentucky Derby and Preakness winners both failed to finish in the money.

Handicapping the Celtics' 2011 draft

▶ Boston holds 25th, 55th picks in next week's event ▶ Here's two solid options who should be there in the first round, and one for the second

CHRIS CHAMBERS/GETTY IMAGES

▶ Marshon Brooks should be there when the C's pick at No. 25.

1 Marshon Brooks Shooting guard Providence

This guy is not your average shooting guard. The senior scorer out of Providence stands 6-foot-5 but plays much bigger than that, thanks to his massive 7-foot-1 wingspan.

He can score in bunches, as shown by his single-game and career Big East scoring records, and can also use his size on the glass.

Let's face it: Ray Allen isn't getting any younger, and the C's need to find a viable replacement for the future Hall of Famer.

Brooks is third on the draft's SG depth chart. He'll be there if Charlotte (19) and Denver (22) skip over him for forwards.

2 JaJuan Johnson Power forward Purdue

We're sticking with seniors in this draft, because at this stage, the C's aren't looking for projects — they want players who can come in and contribute off the bench right away.

Cue Purdue's JaJuan Johnson, a 6-foot-10, 220-pound power forward. He sure seems like a great fit for the Celtics' open court with Rajon Rondo and Jeff Green.

Off the floor, Johnson leaves Purdue with a degree, and comes with a reputation as one of the most mature players in the draft. He'll be available at 25 because of his lack of size; scouts are labeling him a "tweener." But he's worth a shot.

3 Jamie Skeen Power forward VCU

Nobody thought VCU would make it to the Final Four, but they surprised everybody as the NCAA tournament's true Cinderella team.

Jamie Skeen, the Rams' senior power forward, hopes to continue the dream year by getting drafted. At 6-foot-8 and 240 pounds, Skeen may lack the height to make it in the NBA, but he surely caught the eyes of the C's in that NCAA run. He'd already worked out for them during the season.

Second-rounders are usually a shot in the dark, but Skeen has proven he can play (15.7 points, 7.1 rebounds per game) and win on the big stage. That may be enough for the C's to take a flier.
